Zine Quote of the Month

“Climate justice is racial justice, this we know. But too often, communities of color are left out of conversations about environmental reform, unrecognized for their activism, and left unprotected as conditions worsen. We are seeing this today as the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic disproportionately impact Indigenous, Black, and Latinx communities. As climates continue to change, sea levels rise, and catastrophes become more common, we can only hope that we learn from this global crisis to prevent such patterns from repeating during the next one. In these (and all) times of fear, I find love in our communities and strength in the fact that this is our earth, too.” – Parima Kadikar,

Zine-of-the-Month

Zine: Frida at my Table: Volume 1/Book 2 by Janice Quiles Reyes, 2018, Zines Q55f 2018z
Review by: Maura Mulholland '25

This zine addresses one of the most controversial features of a woman: body hair. Quiles Reyes collects firsthand experiences surrounding women, their shaving habits, and societal reactions to them. By using the famously hairy Frida Kahlo as a muse and mentor, Quiles Reyes emphasizes the ubiquity, beauty, and political neutrality of body hair on a woman and remarks on why we partake in the cosmetic rituals we do.
